

The Man Who Shared His Jumper

A true story of Richard Wurmbrand, of Rumania.

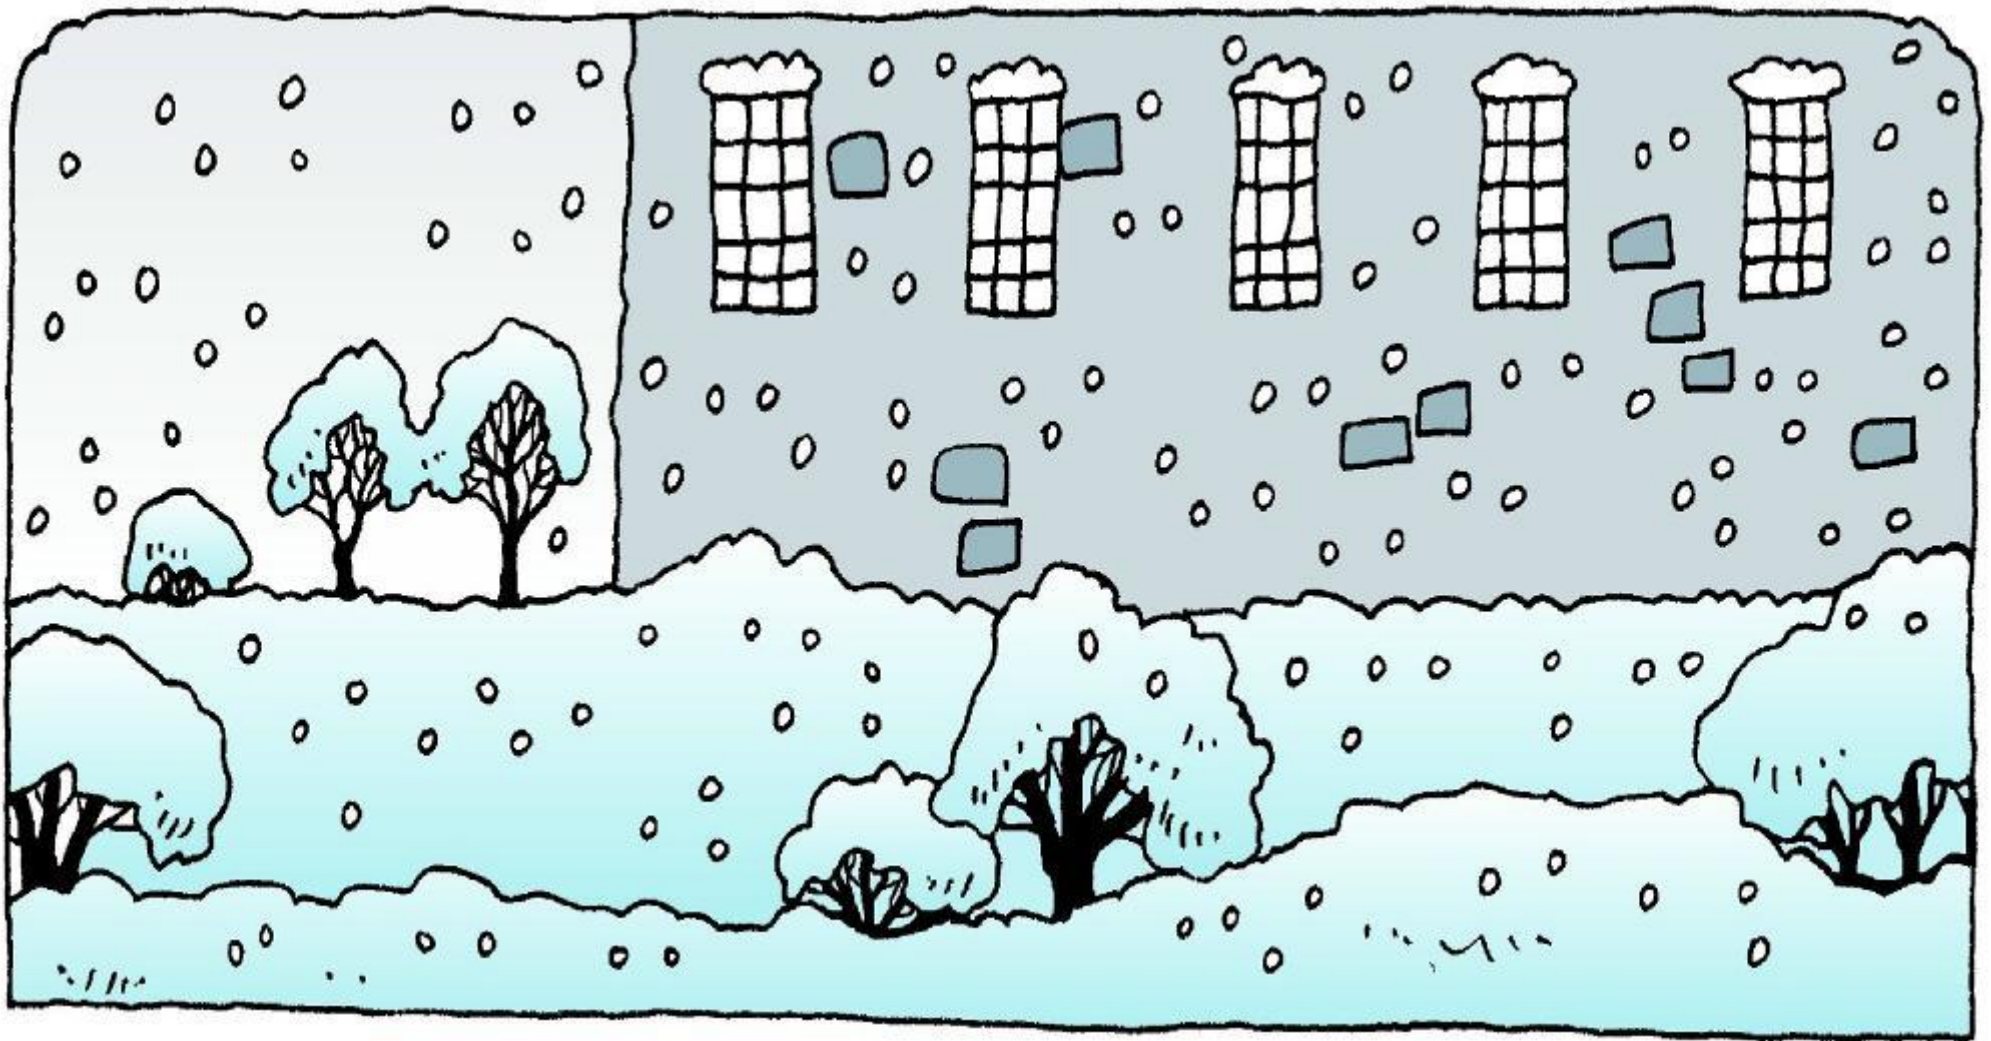

By Jill Kemp

Illustrated by Richard Gunther

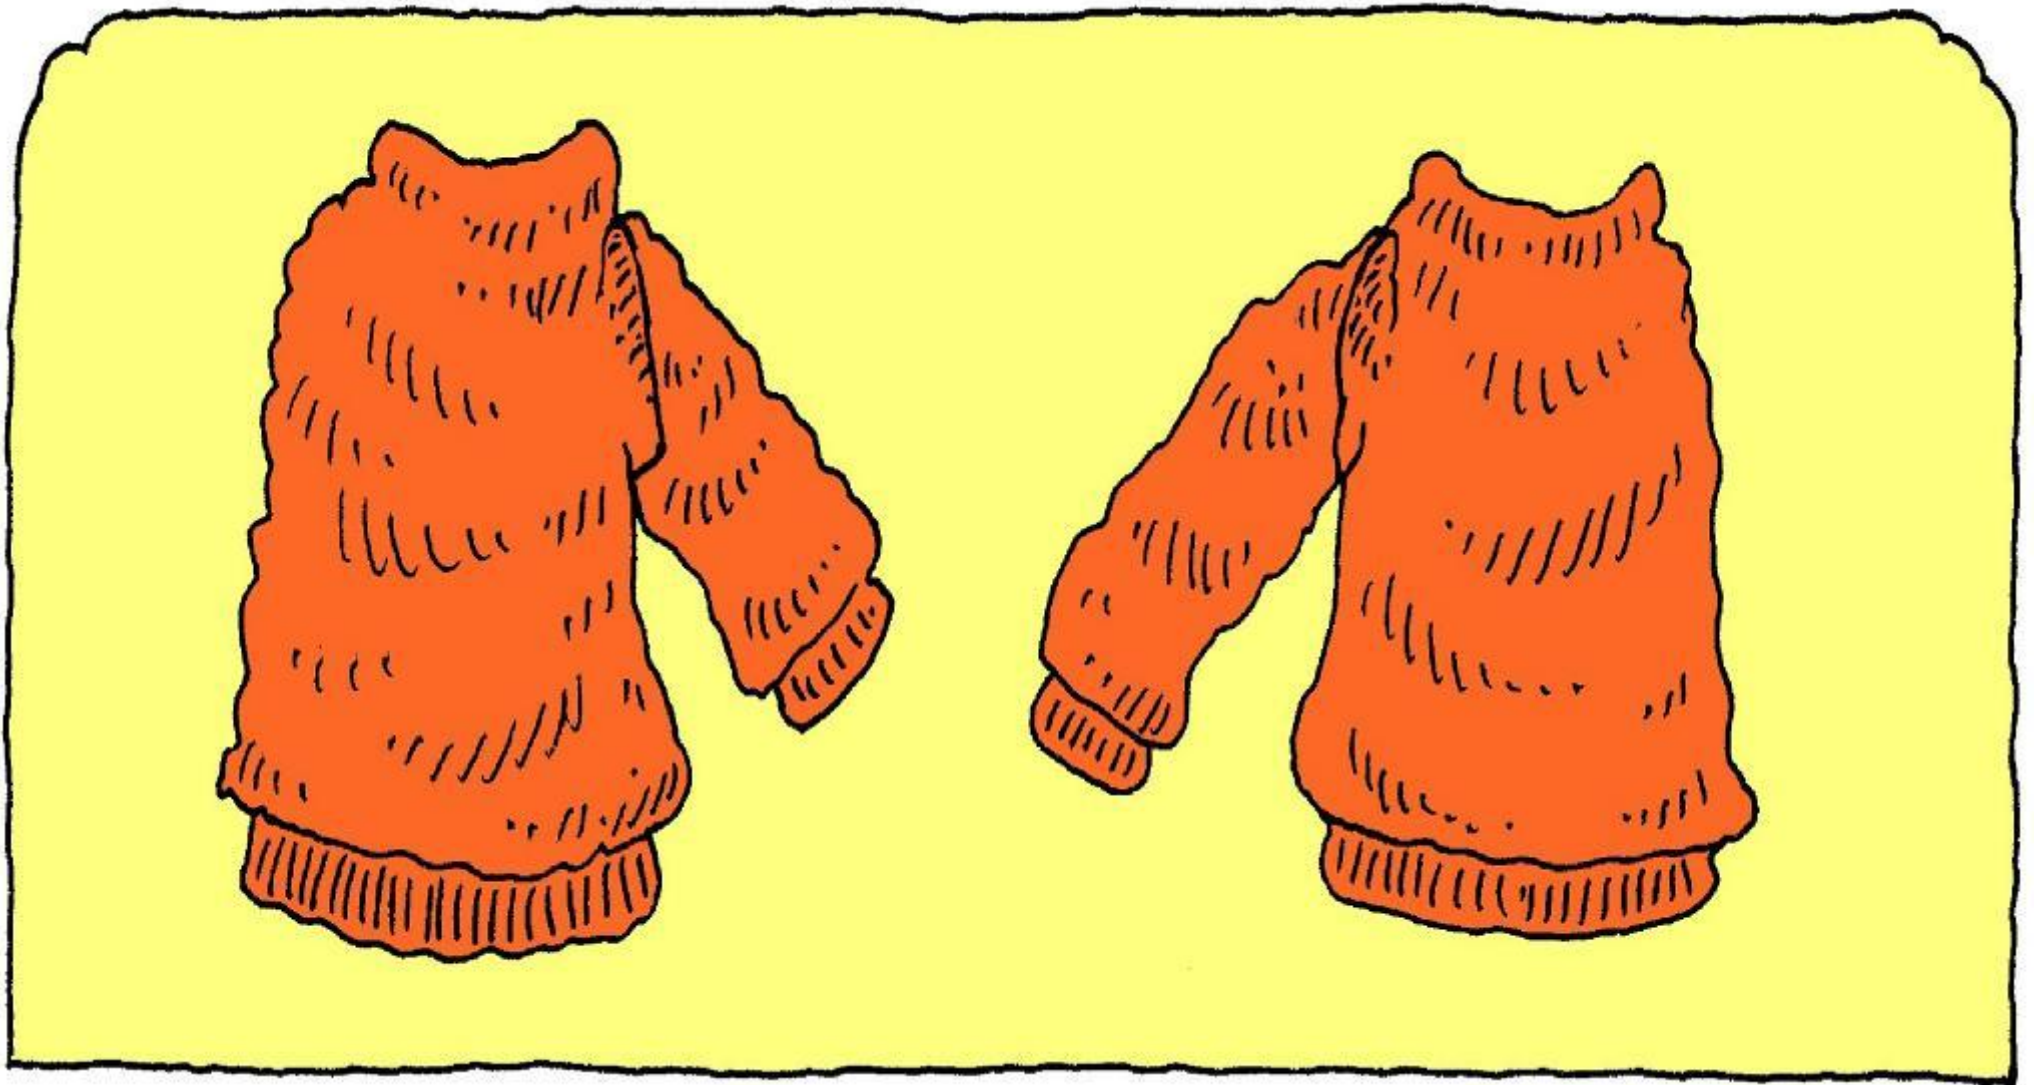

A long time ago, in a far away country,
there was a good Pastor
who told the people in his church
how much God loved them.

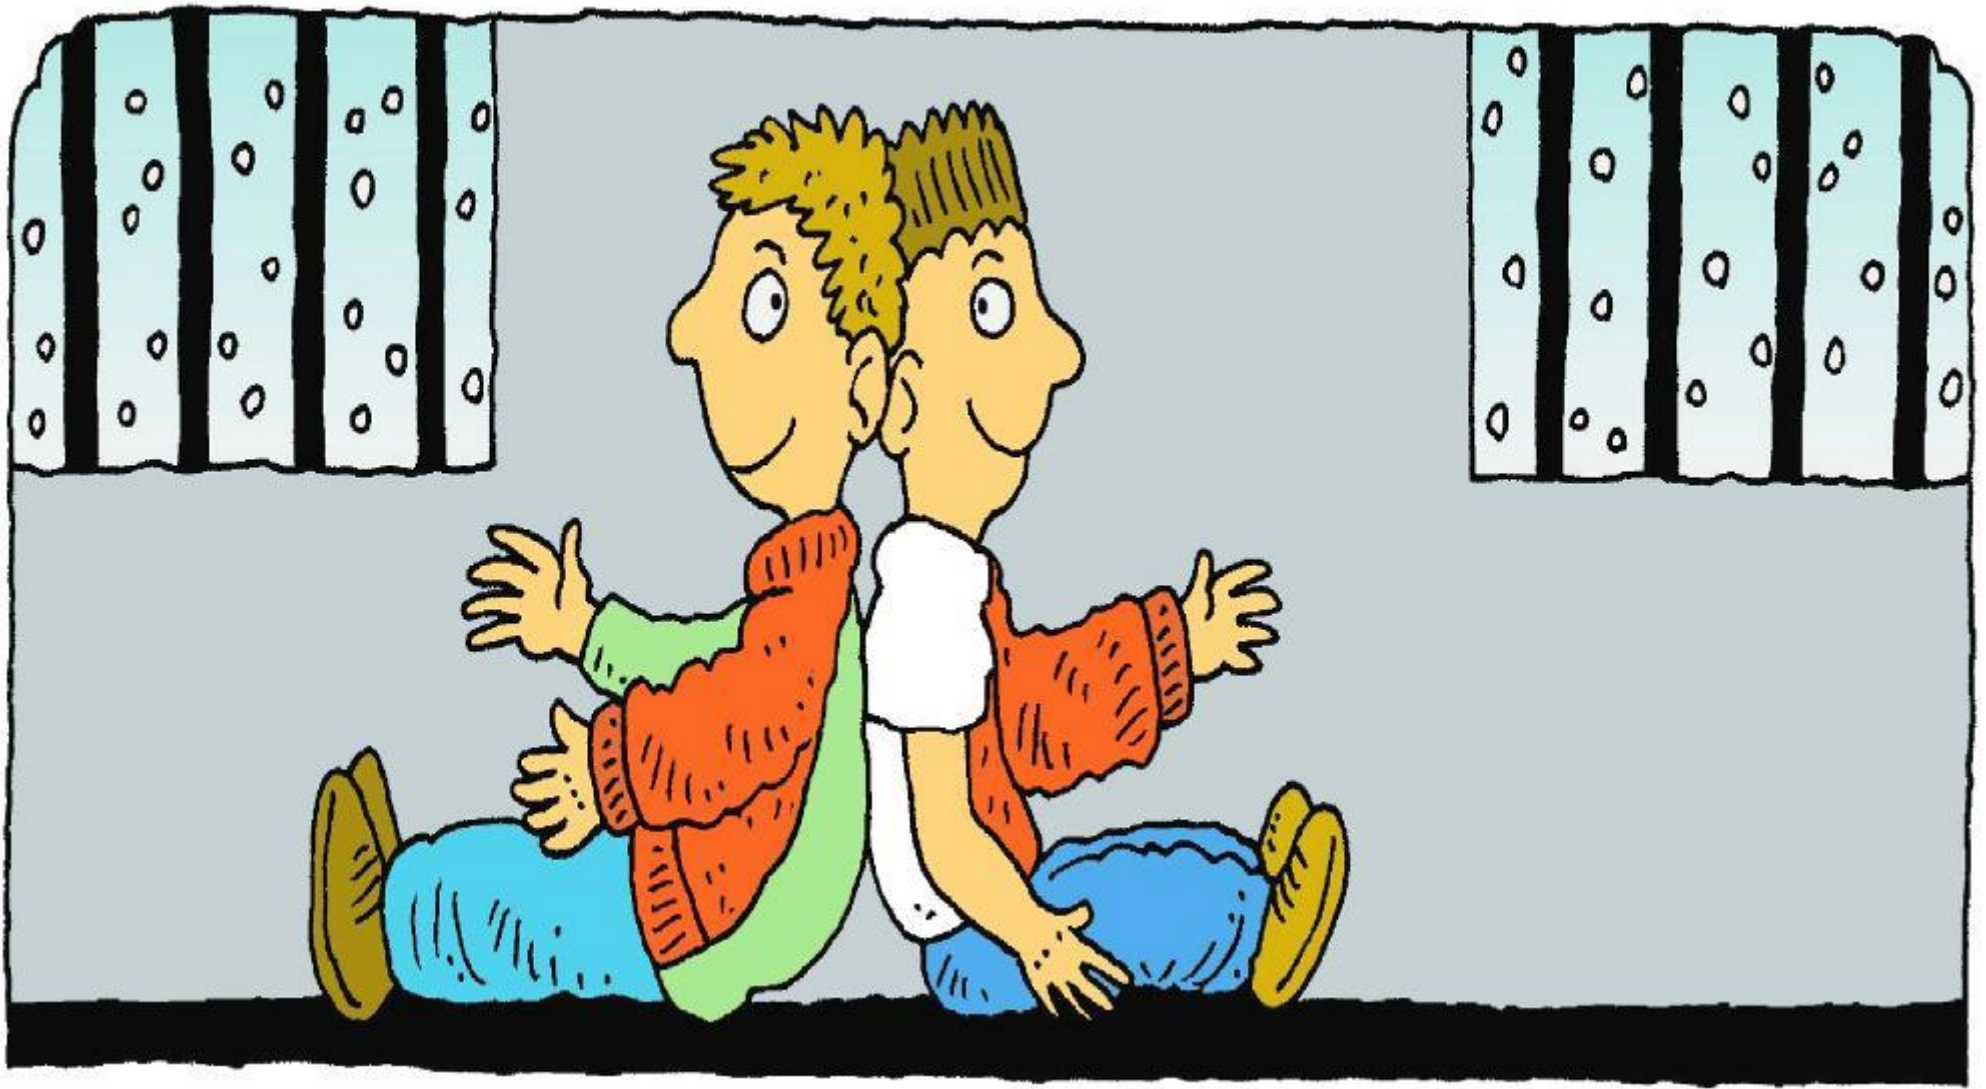

But the government made a new rule.
Anyone telling people about God would go to jail. It was snowing the day the good Pastor was sent to prison.

He thanked God that he was wearing his jumper. The other prisoner in his cell was cold and hungry. "We will freeze or starve to death here," he said.

“How can God be with you
in this awful place?” he asked.
The Pastor carefully unpicked his jumper.
He gave half of his jumper to the other man.

They sat back to back,
warming each other.
The Pastor told him about Jesus
and how much God loves us.

Soon the other man
believed in Jesus too.
“Let us show other prisoners how much God loves them,” he said.

They each began to share
a piece of their bread with sick and hungry prisoners.
You don't have to be rich to help others.